Eugene V. Debs says he knows of no more refining influence than if every person could be locked up for six months. He ought to know something about it.

Six of the South African millionaires are believed to own $195,000,000 between them. Mr. Alfred Beit is the richest with sixty millions. Mr. Barnato has fifty, and Mr. Cecil Rhodes has twenty-five millions.

A simple device for preventing the taking of poison by mistake when a bottle is picked up hastily, or in the dark, has been invented at Philadelphia. It looks like any other bottle, but when one pulls out the cork and tips the bottle nothing flows. The only way to get at the contents is to unscrew the top, as the cork is merely a "dummy." It seems that this should work.

The inmates of some of the county institutions in Michigan are living high these days, feasting on venison to their heart's content. The game law in that State provides that the license issued to a hunter shall have attached to it as many coupons as he is permitted to kill deer, and a coupon must be attached to every deer carcass. When the officers find a carcass without a tag it is seized and sent to the county institutions or distributed among the poor of the nearest city. The slaughter of game in the State this year is lamentably great, and the seizures of untaxed venison by law officers have been numerous.

The rice grown in the Calcasieu region of Louisiana is said to be almost unmarketable this year by reason of the number of red grains it contains. The New Orleans Pioneeer says: The presence of the red grains always hurts the sale of the rice, and the value depreciates in proportion to the percentage of red grains present. This season the presence of red rice is so general that it looks as if the entire Calcasieu section of the rice belt has become infested with the red rice, which is a most difficult pest to get rid of. This has been due to failure to renew the seed used, and good authorities claim that the only effective way of exterminating the red rice is to import seed and plant on entirely new land, allowing the old or red rice land to remain idle for a time, or devote it to other crops or to grazing.

The Supreme court of Colorado has just rendered its first decision in a case involving the responsibility of a corporation controlling electric wires for injuries sustained by a person who receives a shock by coming in contact with them. A man passing through a public alley in Denver ran into a live wire which had been strung by the Denver Consolidated Electric Light company. He was seriously injured and brought suit for damages. The company claimed in the first place that no liability existed on its part and further that the man was guilty of contributory negligence. Both these points were overruled, and the jury returned a verdict for $2,500 in favor of the plaintiff. The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme court, which held that a corporation engaged in distributing electricity was bound to exercise extraordinary care and caution, its obligation in that regard exceeding that of a common carrier because of the dangerous character of the business.

A writer in the Outlook says that some years ago a friend of his wrote a short story which a magazine accepted and paid $50 for. The years went by, and the story still rested snugly in the safe. Meanwhile the author of the tale had become an industrious man of letters and had achieved some little reputation. He one day met the editor, whom he had come to know, and asked him when he intended to print that story. The editor replied that he could not tell, but probably not in the immediate future. The author went home and thought the thing over, and then asked the editor for the privilege of buying the story back. The editor assenting to this, the author gave him $50 and received back his story. He read it over, made a few minor changes in it, put a new title to it, had it typewritten, and then sent it back to the editor of the same magazine from whom he had just bought it. In a short time came a check for $150 and a call from an illustrator who had received an assignment to make pictures for it, as the editor intended to publish it immediately.

The Baltimore School board is going to care for the eyes of the children in the public schools. Under its direction a systematic examination of the children's eyes will be made soon, to be followed by other periodic examinations. The purpose is to determine the condition of the pupils' vision when they enter school and also at the beginning of each scholastic year of the course, with the view of preventing injury to those children whose sight is not good enough to justify them in doing the work that they would have to do in school. If a child's sight is found to be below a safe standard for school work, or if there is any evidence that the school work causes him or her pain or distress, the principal of the school will send a note to the parents notifying them of the condition of the child's eyes, and suggesting that the child be taken to some oculist or to some eye hospital in order that the case may be properly treated. Another feature of the plan is to have the oculists appointed by the board thoroughly examine the class rooms to see if they are properly lighted, if the location of the desks is proper, and if the height of the desks is proportionate to the height of the pupils.

GOOD NOMINATIONS.

The Republican city convention Saturday evening picked out some good men for commissioners, and the selection indicates that at least one of the Macdonalds whom the Register saw falling the other day has landed on his feet. As the nomination is equivalent to election the agony is over for the Republicans. They have done well, and they can now sit around and see the Democrats wrestle with the Gilhuly problem. And what a problem it is. Commissioner Gilhuly shows no signs of weakening. He has made his heart harder, put more sand in his gizzard and re-stiffened his neck. He is standing sturdily up under the responsibility that has been put upon him. He has now the burden of the local and the State Democracy to carry, and we shall not be surprised to see the Register load him with the national Democracy. It will be necessary to have a scapegoat next year, and "Charge it to Gilhuly!" will be as good a cry as any. If he gets the nomination for Police commissioner he won't care, for his motto is "Business before pleasure."

THE FOOTBALL GAME.

Last week we heard a great deal about the unfortunate condition of the Yale football players. They had had so many accidents that it seemed doubtful that any of them was of sound and disposing body enough to play a game through without dying. The outlook was gloomy indeed. On the other hand we heard that the Princeton men were all in the condition of Hercules when he did his wonderful labors. They expected to win and their friends were sure they would. But they didn't. Yale pluck, skill and luck came to the front when needed, as they usually do, and the Yale cripples who were by special permission out of the hospital for the afternoon only did things which violated the conditions of their permit. They acted as if they had come suddenly and completely under the influence of the faith cure.

The game was not of a savage and bloody kind, and it will do much to restore to football the favor it has lost. There was some interesting running about the field by doctors, attendants with blankets and water pails, and there was much applause when a young man after apparently falling dead would rise into renewed life and activity. But there were no real deaths, and but one accident that could be called serious. There was also but one outbreak of "slugging," and the slugger, a Princeton man, was promptly put out of the game. On the whole the game was as humane as any such contest could be expected to be, and was therefore probably a little disappointing to some of the spectators who were "out for blood."

The weather bureau was quite as badly beaten by the weather as Princeton was by Yale. Dire predictions had been made by the bureau of rain, snow and cold, but the weather minded no more about those predictions than the Yale team did about the dire predictions concerning it. The sun shone serenely and the air in the field was as smooth and as soft as the air in the vale of Avoca. The 45,000 people who saw the game were all comfortable and enthusiastic, and felt that it was good to be there. It was a great day for the game and a great game for the day.

A RIGHT OF TRAVELERS.

What does a man buy when he buys a section in a sleeping car? He buys the right to sleep in it if he can, and Judge Ritchie of the Superior court of Maryland holds that the buyer of a section of a sleeping car for a given trip has the right, if he leaves the train before reaching his destination, to transfer the use of his section to another first class passenger for the balance of the trip for which it was sold. This decision was the result of a damage suit brought after ejection from a section occupied in consequence of such a transfer. The railroad company admitted the right of transfer before entering upon a journey, but held that after starting upon the trip the holder of a section forfeited his rights if he abandoned the train before arriving at his destination. The court holds that there is no analogy between the contract entered into on a regular trip ticket and that implied by the sale of a sleeping section. In the former case a break in a continuous trip and resumption of the journey at the passenger's pleasure would be a hardship on the company, which had provided accommodations based on ticket sales, and which would be forced to transfer a passenger's baggage from one train to another, besides suffering delay and hindrance not contemplated. In the case of sleepers the company suffers no hardship by a transfer which merely takes a passenger from one section and places him in another. It can make no possible difference whether a particular section is occupied by one passenger or another, as no additional attention is demanded of the company. In the case in question the transferred section was ignorantly sold to a new passenger, but, as the judge says, when the company undertakes to sell again what it has already sold once and been paid for, it does so at the risk of trespassing upon the rights of others—and such trespass was shown here, where the departing passenger exercised his right in making the transfer. It is conceded that a transfer is valid if the person making it remains on the train, and Judge Ritchie can find no law for invalidating it if the passenger chooses to disembark.

FASHION NOTES.

Expendents of Hair Dressing.
It looks dreadful in print, but it's a fact that a great many women are wearing false hair. Many are even having parts of their own hair cut off, the sacrificed locks being made up into the required knot, wind of braids or "front." It is so much easier to keep hair in order off the head than on, so much more simple to do it off the head, pinning it in place all done up than it is to worry with arranging it when the roots are there to interfere.

Little bunches of curls come fastened to combs, and are so convenient. They will tuck in anywhere and often a coiffure really unbecoming is made delightfully attractive by the change of outline these little ruffles properly applied will accomplish. In all this no advocacy of such tricks is intended for the woman who is properly outfitted with hair by nature. Even she whose locks are somewhat defective will find many more agreeable ways of arranging her crowning glory if she exercises some ingenuity, for though the present fad is for the pompadour style, the hair may be done to show it to its best advantage. Despite the pompadour, the girl who looks deliciously demure with her hair all over her ears will go right on looking that way, as she ought to. A woman cannot be bullied into giving up a becoming style unless something better appears. But a majority of the real swell women now show foreheads above which rise softly puffed rolls. When the pompadour proves to be too severe for the face, relieving modifications of it are entirely permissible, and it is one of these modifications, a blend of pompadour and the last popular style of hair dressing, that is shown herewith. To many it will seem preferable to either the trying forehead rolls or the mirror-like smoothness to away down over the ears. It is made especially attractive when topped by this sort of toque, which here is of velvet, edged with a full twist of pearly colored mousseline de soie. The latter is draped with a few attaches here and there and forms a very full looped arrangement in back that hangs over the hair, as indicated. For trimming there are two large yellow roses in a light lavender shade, placed at either side of the front where there is a small jet butterfly and several stiffened loops of the mousseline. FLORETTE.
